

COLLEGE STUDENT LOSES THE FIRST LEGAL SKIRMISH

Harry Kleinschmidt's Release by Writ of Habeas Corpus is Postponed Until Tuesday --Grand Jury Meets Monday

[By Associated Press.]
BERKELEY, Nov. 29.—Harry Kleinschmidt, the college student accused of the murder of Frank Bellows, has lost the first legal skirmish in the battle to save himself from possible conviction. With the postponement of a decision on a writ of habeas corpus until Tuesday, Kleinschmidt loses his chances of obtaining even temporary freedom as the grand jury meets Monday. District Attorney Brown confidently expects that body to return an indictment for murder against the college student.

Evidence corroborating the testimony of R. M. Peck, the friend who was with Bellows on the night of his death and who patiently waited for his return from the house of the Kleinschmidts, came to light last night. W. W. McGuire, a bookkeeper and timekeeper at the Claremont hotel, living at 2315 Howe street, told a story of a fight which he and his wife received in a dark street alongside the vacant lot in which the body of Bellows was found.

On the night of the murder, if murder it was, McGuire, accompanied by his wife and 2-year-old baby, was walking along Russell street on his way home. When the trio reached a spot within a few hundred feet of the point where Bellows' body was discovered next day they were startled at the sound of a scuffle in the tall mustard bushes covering the field at that time and afterwards carefully cleared away.

Pausing, uncertain as to the cause of the noise, the couple listened. Mrs. McGuire swears that she saw a head rise out of the clump of bushes, peer at them for a second and then disappear as she screamed in her fright. To reassure her McGuire called out and moved into the brushwood for a few feet, returning with the assurance that what his wife had seen was only a cow. His words were disproved by the sound of a groan and the pair hurried on to the corner of Russell and Pine streets about 200 feet away. There they met a man, unknown to them but since learned to be Peck.

Added to the story told by Peck himself this forms a strong chain of evidence as to the doings of that fateful half hour which elapsed between the arrival of Bellows at the front door of the Kleinschmidt home and the moment Harry Kleinschmidt called out of the window:

"You can't have those letters, Bellows."

District attorney and police are attempting to account for every second of time that evening and the manner in which Harry Kleinschmidt spent it. This statement by McGuire cuts a good ten minutes off the tale. But little now remains to be accounted for, and the odds are closing tighter and tighter.

Yet another detail which the authorities think they have made clear as a result of painstaking work is the size and general character of the bottle containing the cyanide of potassium which is acknowledged to have killed Bellows. They have learned that it was small, flat and of the same size and description as that of a thousand of its fellows in the laboratory of the college of mines of the University of California, where Kleinschmidt was a student.

Efforts were made by the lawyers of the prisoner to undermine the theory of the prosecution that Kleinschmidt administered the poison to Bellows, by an attempt to show that it could have been given him by some other student.

The attitude of the Kleinschmidts, and especially the attitude made by Walter Kleinschmidt on the character of Blanche Kerfoot, has roused a great deal of indignation among the younger set in Berkeley, where the girl is well known and liked. Reginald Kitrell, the football player, who was one of the last of the friends of Bellows to see him alive and to whom the dead man confided the fact that he feared for his life at the hands of Kleinschmidt, stated yesterday that when the truth became known the feeling against Kleinschmidt would be stronger than it is at present.

"There is another girl in this case," he said, "whose name has not yet come out, but who is well known here and in San Francisco. When all the facts are known and her story is told, there will be a howl raised against this man Kleinschmidt that will startle people." Kitrell refused to say whom he had in mind.

Information is still withheld by the treasury as to the amount of allotments made. Offers for Panama 2 per cent bonds are still reaching the treasury in large numbers. Rates still are prohibitory. The business failures for the week ending November 28 number 286 as against 265 last week. The Canadian failures for the week were 46 as against 35."

MAKES KNOWN INTENT

DELEGATION WITH TAFT.

[By Associated Press.]

ALARMED AT THE LABOR INVASION

PARIS, Nov. 29.—The increasing contingents of home-coming Italians, Lithuanians and other Mediterranean steerage passengers are disconcerting, not only to the steamship companies, which have inadequate facilities for dealing with such sudden and unexpected traffic, but to the labor leaders of Europe, who deny that these newcomers have sufficient money to pass the winter without working and declare that they will thus add to the misery of what is sure to be a hard winter among the European working classes.

The figures given by the French labor bureau as to returning emigrants are corroborated by Nicholas Martin, agent of the American line, who says that all the steerage capacity of every vessel has been taken until February 1st, while thousands more will be unable to return to Europe before spring. Twelve hundred arrived yesterday on the Oceanic. Next Saturday the St. Paul will bring an equal number. The Lorraine, due tomorrow, brings 900. The Maine, which is to arrive early next week, brings nearly 3000.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Never since the first ship sailed out of New York has there been anything like the present exodus of emigrants from this port. Day by day the crowds clamoring for transportation abroad grow greater with no prospect of their reduction in numbers. Last week 30,000 steerage passengers were carried from New York; this week steamship men say the total will reach 50,000. The steerage rate was raised from $21 to $31 in the hope of staying the exodus, but without avail.

DAKOTA SENATORS BOOST ROOSEVELT

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—Senators Gamble of South Dakota and Hasbrough of North Dakota, who have arrived in this city, are enthusiastic supporters of a renomination for President Roosevelt. They declared today that the entire north-west wants the president for another term and that it will accept no one else. They claim that Roosevelt will be renominated without any trouble when the convention meets and that no other candidate will be mentioned. Speaking of the financial stringency, Senator Gamble said: "The people are not blaming the president for the present flurry. They know he is not responsible for what has happened. He simply did his duty and prosecuted corruption wherever he found it. You would not blame a sheriff for arresting a burglar in your home if he was caught. There may be a panic but it is necessary that there should be a house cleaning and Roosevelt is the man to do the work. The people of my section want him to continue."

STOCK MARKET LOOKING BETTER

[By Associated Press.]
NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Human motives, which always lie back of action on the stock market, were rather more easily discerned today than usual. The halting, irregular movement of the market was quite plainly a reflection of the dread of the exigencies of December 1, when money settlements would bring out some forced liquidations of a kind which has come on the market from time to time since the financial condition began to mend. The buoyant tone that developed later was evidently due to a conviction that December settlements were not to entail serious burdens on the market. The time money market, while also very narrow, indicated no such dead-lock as has been the rule since the financial crisis. Bonds were very strong.
